

Dear Sir,

I am dismayed that Sinclair has violated the public trust by airing Stolen Honor a few weeks before the election. We, the public, count on the major networks and their sponsors to report accurate and balanced presentations for all political candidates and their parties. When the line is crossed, as in this case, it smacks of political chicanery. It does not take too much intelligence to untangle the intentions and persons involved in this decision. The American people are again the losers. As they naively trust the networks to make ethical decisions. Hopefully, they can count on the FCC to right these wrongs.

Thank you.

Respectfully,

Francine Lampidis
